My take on this is simply that the punishment for Microsoft should be based on the amount of money they made from violating the antitrust laws. This would be an enormous sum and would probably break up the company as we know it. So much the better for the marketplace. The best technologies being developed right now will never stand a chance to make it to consumers if Microsoft remains intact and without fear of reprisal from the DOJ. Redmond is laughing their asses off right now. And the joke is on all of us.
